

Growers contracted as part of Cargill's Specialty Canola Program are set to benefit from the appointment of experienced DPI plant breeder, Laura Maher, as the new Cargill Research and Development Agronomy Manager for Specialty Canola.

Laura will be responsible for development, sample testing and trial data for specialty canola in Australia to assist in the expansion of the healthy oil program in Australia.

"As the program develops we will have different maturing varieties available so that the grower can choose varieties most suited to their environment and herbicide systems. I am really excited about being an integral part of this program, working on the growth of it, and seeing – in years to come – the time investment paying off as new varieties become available to the grower, and healthier oil choices become available to the consumer" Laura said.

For further details about the program please contact your local AGA Field Merchant.